Michele Deitch is a Senior Lecturer on criminal justice policy at the University of Texas at Austin, where she holds a joint appointment at the Lyndon B. Johnson School of Public Affairs and at the School of Law. She has extensive professional experience working as a consultant with jails and prisons around the country on safety issues. She has been a federal court-appointed monitor of prison conditions in Texas, and has been an expert witness in lawsuits involving deaths in custody. Prof. Deitch co-chairs the American Bar Association's Subcommittee on Correctional Oversight, and she helped draft the ABA's Standards on the Treatment of Prisoners, which are based on best practices around the country.

For the Fall of 2017, Prof. Deitch is a Visiting Scholar at the National University of Singapore, where she is researching correctional oversight in Asia.
